There are now in a herd a bullock and a sheep, a mere ewe, between the most remarkable station existents. They are Gichen's station at Bland, and they appear to have got together since they have been down the sheep gets on the low or shady side of him; the bullock having been, at last, accompanied him. The Goulburn for sale, and the sheep has accompanied him. At times the other cattle seem disposed to attack the ewe, but the sheep is so much the more resource and keeps them off. They have once or twice been driven to the station for a whole night—and they have then seemed somewhat frantic, the bullock constantly following and the sheep constantly leading. The sheep has been each other, and the sheep has been put into different pens. The excitement of both animals was very great until they were enabled once more to get together.

WESTERN EXPLORATION.—Regarding explorations in the South Australian Register writes: "After an absence of several years, the Western party have been obliged to fall back upon the same formation. A short telegram from Charlotte Waters, near Adelaide, contains all the information that has yet been received."

It contains the pleasing intelligence that the laborers are well, but it says nothing as to the vicissitudes which they have been subjected. From the statements of Mr. Grosse and longitude supplied by the message we find that Mr. Grosse has been at the station for nearly as far as the western boundary of South Australia. So far as we can make out, he has gone a few miles farther west than Ernest Goss, and the place at which his latest observations were taken lies about a degree south of the extreme southern end of the gentleman. The distance traversed by Mr. Grosse is only a few miles north of the line between Charlotte Waters and Perth, so that the work of recently exploration is still very far from completed."

the most frightful accidents that has occurred for some time past (says the Headley Independent), took place in the mine of the Imperial Rustler's Company on the 23rd instant. The subject of the disaster was a fine healthy young man named Arthur William May. He was unmarried, but the surroundings of his death are rendered still darker by the fact that for some time past he has been supposed to be married and that some

By the time the men had made every preparation for the explosion, the taking of the charge was necessary for the safety of the men. Deceased was at work in the bottom of the shaft which is about 115 feet. No one was working with him at the time of the melancholy occurrence. Two holes had been bored in the rock ready to receive the charge. Deceased had sent up the caps and fuzes necessary to fill the holes, and his mate sent down some of Nobel's giant powder. The caps and fuzes necessary to fire the charge being hung on to the bucket, which was lowered, and the bucket was hoisted up to the surface, but left the other articles where they had been placed by the men. Deceased had placed the powder in the holes, when suddenly the men working above heard a tremendous explosion. Immediately after this, deceased leaped unaided into the Ring four times." When the other miners reached the bottom, May was found to be frightfully injured, the lower part of his stomach being fearfully cut, his bowels protruding through the cuts, and his left hand nearly blown off. He was at once hauled to the surface and from there conveyed to the hospital, but he died on the road to the hospital from loss of blood, and the frightful nature of his wounds. When the other miners went to his assistance his fuse and caps were found hanging to the bucket, a fact that he could not have had time to complete the charging of the holes. It is supposed, therefore, that the accident occurred while he was tamping the charges, a spark most likely being caused by the tamping bar striking the rock. No positive reason can be given, however, for the powder exploding, as the deceased worked alone in the bottom at the time, his mate being in the level above. The untimely end of poor May cast a gloom over the miners working in the

DEATH BY DROWNING.—The Singleton correspondent of the Maitland Mercury reports that on Wednesday afternoon Mrs. Waddell was accidentally drowned, when bathing in the river, at a place called the "Basin," in the Rev. J. S. White's property. The deceased, who is now 25 years of age, had been married for two years to Mr. Daniel Waddell. Miss Ada Huxley, a niece of the unfortunate lady, gave the following account of the melancholy event:

“I returned, at six o'clock, men on the body — about a clock after noon, she said that she was going to bathe, and asked me to go with her to the river and I went with her. I asked her to go into the water, but she said she preferred to go into deep water; she went nearly across the river and then came back again, when she got into a hole. I was sitting near to her on a steep bank; when she came into the hole she sank; she came up again, and then commenced tearing her hair, and trying to get her clothes off: she then sank again, and I did not see any more of her: I cried out, but nobody came; then ran towards Mr. Dince's house, when I met Mr. Dince and told him: the deceased could not swim; she backed across the river a little distance below where her husband was killed. She then turned back and, in coming back, she got into a deeper place. Frederick Taylor stated that he was informed that Mrs. Waddell was killed by a crocodile. He stated that she was in the water, and found the body. The water was very deep and he did not know how she got out. He did not see a crocodile where he found the deceased. She had on a pair of flannel drawers and some other dress. The deceased was not wearing any shoes.

He was examined by Mr. Read, said that the ship arrived last week ago. The change from salt to fresh provisions made him unwell, and he suffered from dysentery. The ship was anchored in the stream. On Monday morning, when the men came up from breakfast, the mate allotted them work. He pointed to the complainant, and said, "Can that bull-headed man point?" Complainant replied,—"I don't think there is any bull-headed man in the ship." The mate told him to go aloft and grease the fore-mast. He said he was unwell, and unable to do it. The mate gave him 10 minutes to think about it. Complainant again said he was unable to do the work, and stated why. The

to the handcuffs, and he had to hold up to the surface of the floor until he was barely touched by the rope. In this position his head was thrown forwards, and there was a constant strain on his shoulder blades. He was able now and again to rest his heels on the deck. In about 10 minutes the mate returned, and asked him if he would do the work now. He said he could not. The mate then tightened the rope until he could only touch the deck with his toes. He was tied up about 40 minutes altogether. The mate came to him again, and asked him if he would do part of the work. He said he would, and was released. For a short time he felt great pain in his shoulders, arms,

The captain then gave him a large dose of cod liver oil. The fact that the complaint was tied up was noted, and about the lunch was restored by him. He said that the time that he was at the hospital was the time that the women, whose work was at the forge as well as that the complaint was tied up from thirty to forty minutes. They passed him once or twice when the mate happened to be away, and noticed that his eyes were bloodshot and starting from his head; water was running down from him. He did not speak to them.

The third seaman was the complainant for ten minutes of the time he was tied up. The captain was not on board at the time. One of the men (Pollock) heard the complainant say to the mate at the first that he was sick. Mr. Harcourt admitted that the defendant had exceeded his authority. But the man led him to suppose that he would not work, and said nothing about illness until afterwards. The mate first asked him to paint, and he said he couldn't. Then he asked him to grease the rig, and he said he couldn't. He would not do anything more until he was taken ashore. At that time, Lowell, the master of the ship, said that he was not ashore at 9 o'clock, and did not know that the man had been in there until he returned. The

He did not complain to him in the morning that he was ill. He reprimanded the mate, for he was annoyed at what he had done. The complainant was shipped as a great hand. He was put on board by the Consul, who had the power to ship any man he pleased. Complainant could only be considered a landman even now. The Bench said that the defendant had been guilty of great cruelty. They were not quite certain as to the jurisdiction they had, and they thought that the best way to prevent a miscarriage of justice was to fine the defendant £10, the maximum sum, with 25 sh. costs; in default, six weeks' imprisonment.

PEDERSTERNISM.—A foot race for £100 a-side

between Dunlop, of Hamilton, and Stafford, of Newcastle, came off at Waratah, in the Hunter district, on Tuesday last, and resulted in favour of the former. The Newcastle Chronicle gives the following particulars of the contest:—"The distance to be run was 500 yards—both men to start at scratch. Dunlop seemed in better spirits than Stafford, who appeared slightly over anxious and eager, while Dunlop was evidently more at his ease. The first was Messrs. E. Bogue and G. Cooper, with Mr. A. Campbell as starter. All being declared ready, at the report of the gun sent both men away very little time. The race, being but a short one, gave but a little time for critical observation. Dunlop was in the lead from the start, and preservation as to what they were doing, and when slightly in advance of the other, and at the moment of the start, and in the period of the race—and also when neck-and-neck with Dunlop—had a knack of partially looking over his shoulder towards him. Dunlop's step seemed to take up more ground than Stafford's. For about thirty yards they kept shoulder to shoulder; Stafford then gained nearly half a yard, and kept it for a second or two, but at fifty yards Dunlop caught him, and when about seventy yards had been run off, made a spurt, leaped beyond him, and maintained the lead till he breasted the tape, coming in a winner by a good three yards. Time, sixteen seconds and a quarter. As the two men neared the winning-post the excitement became indescribable.
